DIRECTORATE OF INTELLIGENCE  1 July 1985  Japan: Reviewing Short-Term Trade Policy Options 25X1  Summary  Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERS) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics. 25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concrete-and boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA, Northeast Asia Division, OEA, 25X1	Sar	nitized Co	ру Ар	prove	d for F	Releas	e 201	0/05/	11 : C	IA-RI	DP04T	Γ0044	47R00	030186	60001-	6 X I
Japan: Reviewing Short-Term Trade Policy Options  Summary  Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERs) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicicans have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concrete-and boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA,  25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1							p.
Japan: Reviewing Short-Term Trade Policy Options  Summary  Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERS) probably will form the centerplece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concrete-and boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA.  25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1							ŧ.
Japan: Reviewing Short-Term Trade Policy Options  Summary  Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERS) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concrete-and boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA.  25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1							Washingto	on, D. C. 20	505
Japan: Reviewing Short-Term Trade Policy Options  Summary  Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERS) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concreteand boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA.  Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Division, OEA.  25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1				D	IREC'	rorat				I GE	NCE
Summary  Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERs) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concreteand boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA,  25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1								ų	•				- - -	.
Summary  Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERs) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concreteand boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA.  Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Division, 25X1	_					1	Jul.	y 1 * 9	85				ت. د. -	- -
Japanese trade policymakers are currently dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERs) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concreteand boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OEA,  25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1	Ja	apan: R	Revie	wing	g Sho	rt-T	erm	Tra	de Po	olic	у Ор	tio	ns [			25 X 1 dividing their time between drawing up an action plan for liberalizing imports over the next three to five years and devising short-term measures to halt the growth of the trade surplus. Although several temporary measures are likely to be implemented during the summer, we believe voluntary export restraints (VERs) probably will form the centerpiece of Tokyo's efforts to placate foreign critics.  25X1  Temporary Trade Measures: Deja Vu?  Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concreteand boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the  OEA,  25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1							Sum	mary	′
Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concreteand boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the OFA, South State of the OFA State	p f t d r	ividin lan fo ive ye he gro empora uring estrai	g thr liars wth ry mthe nts	eir bera and of t easu summ (VER	time lizi devi: he t res er, s) p	betwood betwood between the second terms of th	veen sho sur ike	drats ort-tplus ly tve v will	wing ver erm o be	up the mea lth im tar	an next sure ough plem y ex he c	acti t th s to sevente port	ion hree halveral ed t erpie	lt I
Instead of focusing solely on medium-term plans to liberalize imports, Japanese bureaucrats and politicians have devoted an increasing amount of time to formulating temporary, reversible trade measures. In many ways, this exercise resembles similar activity preceding other trade packages. But we believe the new discussions about short-term trade measures are more likely to result in concreteand boldermeasures than has been the case with past trial balloons.  This memorandum was prepared by Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the Northeast Asia Division, 25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1	Tempor	arv Tr	ade	Meas	ures	: De:	ia V	u?								25 X 1
Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the Northeast Asia Division, 25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1	libera devote revers simila the ne likely	llize i ed an i sible t ar acti ew disc / to re	mpor ncre rade vity ussi sult	ts, asin mea pre ons in	Japa g am sure cedi abou conc	nese ount s. ng of t she rete	bur of In m ther ort-	eaud time any tra term	rats to ways de p	for for ack	d po mula his ages meas	lititing exer	icia: g ter rcis: But : s are	ns ha mpora e res we be e mor	ry, emble lieve e	9
Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Information available as of 24 June 1985 was used in its preparation. Comments and questions are welcome and may be directed to the Northeast Asia Division, 25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1
Northeast Asia Division, 25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1  25X1	Northe	east As nation	ia D avai	ivis labl	ion, e as	Off of	ice 24 J	une	1985	wa	s us	e d	in i	ts			25)
DEA, 25X1  EA M 85-10121 25X1  25X1				mmer	its a	nd q	uest	:10n:	s are Not	e we rthe	lcom ast	e ai Asia	nd ma a Di	ay be visio	n,		25X
25X1																25 X 1
25X1										E	A M		85-	10121		25 X 1
25X1
25X1					_
																25 X 1

-- Japanese officials probably view short-term measures as a means of mollifying critics of the July action plan, which many in Tokyo are already predicting will disappoint the country's trading partners partly because it will not include any revision in import quotas.

t.

-- Even bureaucrats who are more sanguine about the action plan's contents may support short-term measures. They may believe such measures would reduce trade friction-long enough to let permanent liberalization begin to pay off in terms of a reduced surplus.

25X1

As evaluation of policy options has proceeded, some choices--in particular, capital controls--have lost their luster. On the other hand, export restraint appears to be gaining support, although most officials in Tokyo recognize it does not address US demands for boosting Japanese imports.

- -- Export restraint is being stressed at the expense of import promotion because the latter relies heavily on the willingness of private companies to obey administrative guidance. MITI's experience with a plan for Japan's top 60 exporters to boost imports reveals companies are reluctant to heed such guidance (see Tables 1 and 2).
- -- The debate on what form export restraint should take--VERs or a tax on exports--grew more heated during June. According to press reports, by favoring VERs, Prime Minister Nakasone has pitted himself against other leaders of his own party who support an export surcharge. With businessmen siding with Nakasone, quantitative restraints stand a good chance of being implemented if the trade surplus continues to grow (see Table 2).

25X1

25X1

Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2010/05/11 : CIA-RDP04T00447R000301860001-6

TABLE 1

JAPAN: IMPORT PLANS OF TOP EXPORTERS

Company	1984 Exports (Billion US$)	1984 Imports (Million US$)	1985 Import Goal (Million US$)	Items To Be Purchased
Toyota	10.4	190	210	N.A.
Nissan	8.6	250	270	Supercomputer, auto parts
Matsushita	3.7	285	320	Aluminum ore, semiconductors, wood products
Sony	2.6	165	220	Helicopters, household appliances, cathode ray tubes
NEC	2.2	N.A.	N.A.	Semiconductor production equipment, local area network software
Mitsubishi Electric	1.9	240	360	Electronic parts

Top exporters who have not yet publicly revealed their import plans (with 1984 exports, in billion dollars, in parentheses) include: Honda (5.4), Hitachi (4.1), Mazda (4.0), Nippon Steel (3.8), Toshiba (2.5), Nippon Kokan (2.0), and Sanyo (2.0).

25X1

Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2010/05/11 : CIA-RDP04T00447R000301860001-6

TABLE 2 JAPAN: TRADE POLICY OPTIONS

Option	Proponents	Opponents	Comments
1. Export restraints on selected coods	-Prime Minister Nakasone -Keidanren President Inayama -Some LDP leaders, including Chief Cabinet Secretary Fujinami	-Many MITI and Foreign Ministry officials	Implementation looks increasingly likely. Prime Minister Nakasone demanding July action plan to state Japan will exercise export controls if current account surplus increases sharply.	25X1
				25X1
2. Administrative guidance to top exporters to poost imports	-Prime Minister Nakasone -Some MITI officials	-Business executives	Already implemented but projections suggest MITI will not realize original goal of $6-8 billion increase in imports by top exporters. The 60 companies involved will boost imports by 5.5 percent or $5 billion, MITI's revised target for the program. Companies, such as Nissan, criticize plan for ignoring profit motive.	25X1
				25X1
<ol> <li>Emergency imports of aircraft, rare metals, and grain</li> </ol>	-Prime Minister Nakasone	-Some EPA officials	Action plan to include $3 billion in emergency imports, according to press reports.  officials realize thislike pastemergency	25X1 25X1
4. Export surcharge	-Some Finance and EPA officials (but only	-MITI and Agriculture officials	programs unlikely to have much impact on trade surplus.  Unlikely except to preempt US import surcharge, which  EPA officials doubt will be enacted,	25X1
	as preemptive measure) -LDP leaders, including Secretary General Kanemaru and Policy Affairs Research Council Chairman Fujio	-Prime Minister Nakasone	If applied across the board, surcharge would hurt exporters in depressed industries as well as vibrant sectors and thus would be politically unpopular. Bureaucrats also question surcharge's effectiveness given floating exchange rate system and worry export surge might precede implementation. Nonetheless, Finance Ministry reportedly studying a 1-2 percent tax on exports—to be earmarked for foreign aid—as part of 1986 budget planning process.	25X1 25X1
1 .

25X1